"The Intel® Play™ Computer Sound Morpher is a lot of fun and really taps into the creativity and imagination of the user … It is a great family toy that is easy to learn and easy to use."

"Children record voices and sounds, then mix and match them in hilarious ways. They can change the meanings of sentences by switching words around, create cool animated characters that blurt out noises, and e-mail their creations to friends. An added perk for adults: The game comes with headphones!"

"You speak into a funky blue microphone, load the recordings into the computer, add kooky sound effects and synch the voice to animations that come with the software. So the next time you scream 'Go to your room!' at your kid, the child can record it on his Sound Mopher microphone, shoot the sound file into the computer, put your words in the mouth of an ogre and e-mail it off to his grandparents."

"The giant chip-maker does indeed make intelligent, computer-connected toys and does a good job of it. Its latest offering, Intel® Play™ Computer Sound Morpher, is due at retail in mid-October and should be a hit with kids 10 and younger … Both the installation interface and the user interface are very hip, slick and graphically excellent."
